Production Increases Throughout the Southwest Oil Country and Stock Als Swell. THE SCOUT & VEEKLY REVIEW

in Oildom-All the Of the Situati opments in the Latest D Regions.

The report the various pipe lines handling oil for the month of June, conclusively how that the predictions made in these columns have come to pass and that the production has manufactured like. terially increased and the stocks like-wise augmented. The increase, how-ever, is greatest in the Trenton rock regions, although the gain in the Penn-cylvania socks is much larger than was anticisated by the average producer. It wis plainly foreseen some time ago that the many good wells struck in comparatively new territory would increase the runs far above the shipments and as a consequence the stocks show a large daily gain. The large gain in the net stocks was indeed a surprise to the trade and gives but little encouragement for any reaction in the market for oil.

Especially is this outlook discouraging in the face of the steady and continued development of good wells in new territory and the finding of more than average roducers in diggings well defined. The almost unprecedentedly ally average runs of Pennsylva. nii oil was not considered possible by many producers, who thought the decline of the old wells would hold the gain down to a small percentage. The largest average in the month of May shown in a long time, reading almost

In the face of all and add to the already large output a ensiderable new production.

Lewis county, West Virginia, is so er an unknown quantity, but the large number of well informed operators who are pushing the experimental drill in the Camden and Weston districts show their faith in the future of the terri-tory and the unexpected is just as likely to happen here as it did at Gaines, Garner or the Wallace district. In the prosecution of most other industries where the output exceeds the with no indication of any change for the demand warrants a resumption of no restrictions, no government in pro- duction to twenty-seven barrels duction, but everyone for himself, all striving bardest to acquire the largest any particular importance aside from ond in the production of every stuple well on top the sand that has all the criticle or commodity, and prosecute earmarks of making a fine shallow sand article or commodity, and prosecute their business upon business principles? The Small Producer.

With the beginning of the new year everything looked bright and prospertain this year he could drill his light territory and increase his bank account r start one. Upon the strength of the outlook he plunged into debt when the market for crude was high and production not equal to the demand, but before he could realize upon his investnts, conditions were changed-completely reversed, and he finds himself in a hole, from which it is hard to extri-cate himself. Some are inclined to take an optimistic view of the present situation and think with the dawn of a new year the big production will have dwin iled down, the stocks drawn upon and that the railing will be fair again. There are others just as pessimistic in their way of looking at the situation, and argue that unless drilling is suspended and the stocks worked off the situation will be no better for years. The view is largely drawn from the large amount of new territory recently developed and the prospective pools in sight, which they think will last a long while to maintain a large production. To revert to the May report, the figures show the net increase of stocks were over 800,000 barrels. Of this amount the Ohio and Indiana stocks are credited with 532,097 barrels, leaving the gain in Pennsylvawere only two months of the year 1899 that showed a decrease in the Pennsylania stocks. In round numbers the runs of Pennsylvania all for the month of May averaged 39,150 barrels a day, which were the heaviest recorded for the past three years and a half. This is a gain over April's daily average of over 2,000 barrels a day, as the runs in April were 96,022 barrels a day. make matters worse, while the runs increased the shipments decreased a daily average of 90,195 barrels, which 5,600 barrels a day, as the shipments in April averaged 94,897 barrels a day. shows that the average daily runs of which is a gain over April of 2,692 barrels a day, the average daily runs in April being 49,481 barrels. In May the daily average shipments of Trenton rock oil were 40,281 barrels, which are the smallest re ded during the pres-ent year and o or 4,000 barrels a day under the daily average in April. In the aggregate the runs of Pennsylvania and Lima oil footed up a daily average of 151,353 barrels, while in the month of April they aggregated 45,514 barrols a day. The net stocks of Pennsylvania oil at the close of 1898 were 11,541,753 parrels, and were increased during 1899 to 13,163,819 barrels. They suffered a reduction in January of 58,760 barrels and in February were followed by another cut of 228,818 barrels, a gain of 157,240 barrels net in March; 26,777 barreis in April, and 272,277 barrels in

These enormous stocks ought to be warning to the producer to stop the drill, and there is no reason why, by ncentrated action, production canno be restricted, stocks reduced and a fair and equitable price received for their product. If the same course is pursued that has marked operations since the beginning of 1900, there is but little hope of the situation growing bet-

Some Good Wells.

The last week has not been prolific of the big producers that characterized field developments for some time in the past. However, in different localties some very fine wells were discovered, but they were manny confined to defined territory. The Gaines annex is doing some bet

When the drill ound the pay the well at first gave evidence of being a gusher. But as the drill was sent deeper into the rock no improvement was shown and visions of Company's five wells are still maintainng a daily production of three hundred barrels, which is a far better record than was looked for in this shallow for mation. The Blessburg company will, in a short time, complete their test venture, east from their producers, while Dr. Styner, after a siege of fishing out tools, has got to drilling again in his test well, located one mile to the straight run should find the interesting spot by the time the report is in type. The Big Injun development in the Stringtown district, Tyler county, West Virginia, also produced another big well on the west side of the pool. It is owned by Smith & Company and located upon the J. W. Healey property. On the start-off the venture made twenty barrels an hour.

While nothing big was developed this week in the old Garner pool, east of Proctor, in Wetzel county, the new producers are holding up well, and in the aggregate the field is making quite a large production. Several additional wells were added to the completed list, ranging in production from 140 to eighty barrels a day. The South Penn Oil Company this week completed a test county, while not a big producer shows the development of some new territory that will pay to work. Late Developments.

Dispatches from the various developnents of importance last night show everal large wells were struck and in territory likely to produce considerable new production.

The Hartman Oll Co.'s big strike at Glover's Gap, Marion county, was a genuine surprise and is the biggest producer found in this locality for a long time. The new discovery is located upon the John Fanel farm, and its initial output was forty barrels an hour, but at this writing has declined to twenty-eight barrels an hour. It has opened up nothing new and is only Important on account of its callbre.

A message to-night from Proctor says the South Penn's No. 8, Henry Garner, is flowing 275 barrels a day and that it makes quite a large scope of territory look good which until the advent of Garner No. 8, was not considered very favorably. News just received from the Wolf

Summit field states that the South Penn Oil Company's No. 4, Brown, and No. 2, M. I. Duncan are each doing 145 barrels a day. They are both located in the northeast extension, the latter being the most advanced well in the ew lead. This result shows the possibility of more good territory in advance. An old scout writing from the Woods run development and also the Richwood run pool, in Wetzel, states there are a number of highly interesting test ventures nearing the gand, that are being whether there is the large scope of good territory existing there that has for a long time been thought a sure gamble.
